Veronika primarily advises on the regulation of relations with minor children, such as setting the conditions for child custody and advising on alimony issues. She focuses on the legal aspects of marriage, including its dissolution, parental responsibility issues and the civil procedural issues of family law, in particular resolving disputed situations in connection with the breakdown of relationships. Veronika also specialises in matrimonial property law, both in the prevention phase, e.g. in the form of so-called modification or pre-nuptial agreements and the setting of mutual property relations between spouses, and in the phase of property settlement (whether by agreement or litigation). She provides legal services in high-conflict cases. Veronika is a member of the Family Law Section of the Czech Bar Association.

Prior to joining our law firm, she worked in two Czech law firms over the course of twenty years, where she focused primarily on employment law in addition to family law. Veronika has many years of experience in preparing employment documentation and setting the content of employment relations from the perspective of both the employer and the employee. She has dealt with a wide range of employment law issues including representation of employers and employees in court and administrative proceedings having employment law aspects. Veronika has experience in dealing with issues such as the concurrent performance of functions, occupational accidents and diseases, various remuneration issues, and, for example, setting up the conditions for working from home office. Veronika was a founding member of the Czech Employment Lawyers Association. In addition to her main specialisation, she also focused on school law, administrative law in the environmental field (waste management), and civil procedural law in resolving complex litigation matters at all stages of court proceedings in various areas of business activities. Veronika also completed a mediation course.
